Tobey West supported by the Towle Ocean Conservation Foundation

We are thrilled to announce $25,000 in support of the Tobey West Acquisition Project by the Towle Ocean Conservation Foundation (TOCF).

TOCF's support of the project underscores the importance of land conservation for the health of the Chase Garden Creek (CGC) estuary, its finfish and shellfish, and all marine life in Cape Cod Bay.

See video of some of CGC's finfish here!

Did you know...

A great variety of insects are pollinators, not just fuzzy bees and pretty butterflies. Take the pictured crane flies ("mosquito eaters," "mosquito hawks") for instance. They resemble large mosquitoes but are harmless to humans, and serve as important pollinators for plants like the Virginia Meadow Beauty (pictured). Or, take male mosquitoes, which, unlike their female counterparts, also feed on nectar, pollinating plants in the process!
